Background

Indian women unlike in the Western world did not have to fight for legal and social rights, it was granted and guaranteed by the provisions of various articles under the constitution of India, at the time of birth of India as a nation.

The constitution of India has ensured women's rights and privileges. Several provisions of the constitution, importantly, Article 14, 15, 15(3), 16, 39, 42 and 51 (A) (e) made sure to cover all the aspects of a woman's life. They received consideration in all the development plans and are central to India's growth story. Despite the guarantee of equality by the supreme law of the land, i.e. the constitution of India; women in India traditionally have not been accorded equal status to men.

With the evolution of India as a nation and economy, the status of women underwent change, from a subject for "Welfare Programs" to "Partners in Development". The paradigm shift is the result of global factors. India was affected by the world wide women's movement that culminated into the year 1975, being declared International Year of Women by the United Nations. As a signatory, to UN's International Year for Women, in 1975 Government of India recommitted itself with renewed energy for the development of women.

The approach to women's development in India was through the development plans. The mapping of the development plans and policies and programs reveals the ever-evolving efforts at women's development and empowerment and is akin to Fred Riggs model of development administration theory. In the context of Indian women development and attempt to empowerment happened simultaneously.

Womenwereempoweredthroughmultipleprogramsthatoscillatedbetweenpolitical, social, health, edu cation and livelihood, firstly to improve their status and help them move up the family and societal ladder and secondly, to encourage them to have a voice and participate in the decision-making process.

Development Plans and Women

Development of women received attention of the Government right from the very First Plan (1951-56). However, women were treated as a subject of 'welfare' and clubbed together with the welfare of the disadvantaged groups like destitute, disabled, aged, etc. Central Social Welfare Board (CSWB) identified the problem of absence of anygovernmental machinery at most levels for welfare related activities and undertook topromoteanumberofwelfaremeasuresthroughvoluntaryorganizations, encouraging women's organizations to take upsuch activities in partnership with the government. Promotion of organizations of women at various

etc. both by the CSWB and the Community Development Program through the first and the second Five YearPlans.

This combination of institution building and human resourced evelopment was also expected to prepare w omen to participate in the political and developmental processes. Thus, though the language of these strategies reflected contemporary meaning of 'welfare' there was a conceptual thrust (even though inadequately articulated) towards actively involving and stimulating the participation of women's organizations in the processes of change. However, as envisaged, the women's participation did not take place largely due to the topdownapproachandthetrickledowntheory, which did restrict women 'sparticipation and failed to promot e gender equality.

The Second to Fifth Plans (1956-79) continued to reflect the very same welfare approach, besides giving prioritytowomen'seducation, by formulating Report of the National Committee on Women's Education (1958-59). However, the planners, failed to address the major problems of poverty, illiteracy, non-enrollment, and drop out etc., and thus women continued to languish at the bottom of the family and society pyramid and stayed away from the mainstream.

Thegovernment,tookmeasurestoimprovewomen'shealththroughschemessuchasMaternalandchild health program. This umbrella program envisioned to check the maternal mortality rates, infant mortality rates, malnourishment and morbidity. The service extended to maternal and child health services, supplementary feeding for children and expectant and nursing mothers. With the passage of time, family planning services were introduced within the health services; the family planning services very quickly and increasingly dominated the health services, with separate allocations and staff. Programs for supplementary nutrition of children and nursing and expectant mothers from disadvantaged groups were introduced by the Welfare Department but received far less priority and resources and no integration with Maternal & Child Health (MCH).

Around the same time the second wave of feminism also challenged the women's development theory; and India was not untouched by the global winds of changes. These approaches were attacked for criticism in the report of the Committee on the Status of Women in India (1974-75).

The Committee pointed out that plans for development of agriculture, industry, fishery, livestock and other major sectors of the Indian economy contained no acknowledgement of the millions of women involved in these sectors for their livelihood.

In fact, women had been increasingly viewed by the planners as not in need of an independent livelihood, to the point where women's decreasing work participation rate and share of employment, increasing poverty and insecurity in sectors of the economy in which they used to dominate earlier (agriculture, forestry, livestock, cottage industry, sericulture, fisheries, retail), were not even viewed as unfortunate problems of change.

This process of marginalization of the large majority of women in the economy and their consequent neglect and devaluation by the society and the State, were demonstrations of gender and urban bias. Treating the decliningsexratioasacompositeindicatoroftheworseningsituationofthemajorityofwomen,theComm ittee demonstrated that this process, begun much earlier, had been accelerated during the period of planned development.

The increasing investment on education, health and the opening of opportunities for public employment had benefited as mall minority, widening the gap between this minority and the majority of women. Even a mo ngst the privileged minority, the promise of gender equality was threatened by escalation of social practices like dowry, continued inequality in personal laws (including Hindu Law which 'reformed' had been after independence)nonenforcementofexistinglaws, which sought to offer some protection to women (e.g. labour laws, criminallaw), and the 'invisibility' of women's needs, concerns and perspectives in the planning. O nthe other hand, the growing emphasis on population control, highlighted women's reproductive, rather than their productive roles, influencing 'populationist' approach to women's developmentneeds.

It was only between 1977 and 1980 that some serious exercises in policy review were taken up. The most significant exercises were the Report of the Working Group on Employment of Women, 1977-78; Report of the Working Group on Development of Village Level Organizations of Rural Women, 1977-78, Report of the Working Group on Adult Education Programs for Women, 1977-78 and Report of the National Committee on the Role and Participation of Women in Agriculture and Rural Development, 1979-80.

These exercises undeniably marked a watershed in conceptualizing basic problems and strategies for women's and Development (Baghdad, 1979) and India's Membership of the Commission on the Status of Women (1978-80) as well as the Preparatory Committee for the Mid-Decade, Copenhagen Conference (1980) and Program of Action.

The conceptual approach evolved through these, identified women's developmental needs as having multiple dimensions, cutting across economic, social and political sectors- requiring explicit examination of women's situation in various sectors of agriculture and allied fields, industry, labour and employment, power, environment, energy, science and technology as well as the social and infra-structural sectors. Such explicit examination called for three operational strategies such as i) Establishing cells within various sectoral development/planning agencies at different levels; ii) Earmarking of a share of various sectoral allocations for investment in women rather than relegate women to only women-specific programs and women-specific agencies; and iii) Promoting rural employment and development through women's own collective organizations, at the grassroots. The spontaneous in digenous models of such organizations had already emerged through the work of Self-Employed Women's Association (SEWA), Women World Foundation (WWF), Annapoorna Mahila Mandal. The economic, social and political dynamism these organizations displayed offered hopes of empowerment for others elsewhere.

The policy makers whole heartedly recognized the need for greater participation of women in all the sphere sof her public and personal life. The government of India was put under pressure by national and international forumstoact. The various policy review committees especially, the National Committee on the status of w omen in India, (GOI 1974), and the Blue Print of Action Points and the National Plan of Action for women (1976), forced the government to recognize women as "active participants in development". The UN declaration of theperiod1974-84astheInternationaldecadeofwomen,madetheclamoringathomeforwomentobeactive participants, made the situation even better, acted a major influencer. The Non- Aligned Movement (NAM) conference on Women and Development in its report, titled "Women Resources and Power" contained many of the lessons of possible generation of employment, reduction of poverty, education, improvement of productivity and women's empowerment through the strategy of increased investment in collective organizations of poor rural women, building on their existing expertise and skills at the initialstage.

TheSixthPlan(1980-

85)sawashiftfromwelfaretodevelopment. The developmental programs were directed to raising the economic and social status of women, including targeted schemes. Accordingly, the Sixth Plan adopted a multi-disciplinary approach with a special thrust on the three core sectors of health, education and employment. In suggesting the need for "administrative innovation" and "collection of sex-wise distribution data on development assistance", the Plan acknowledged the previous neglect, the need for better information flow and new mechanisms to ensure women receive their "due share" of government's attention and support and "equal opportunity for growth and distributive justice". Support for organizations of rural women was suggested on the same principles as organizations of the rural poor — to improve their "bargaining power and access to development assistance".

nof legal aid. Such grassroots organizations "as channels for women to participate effectively in decisions that affect their lives and for promoting adequate development efforts for women at different levels", were felt necessary. There were definite suggestions for active promotion of such collectives by the government and linking them with institutions which could provide in various forms. For education the support emphasis was onspecial supports ervices to expand women's access to all types of education. The need for child careservi ces as a support for education of girls as well as for working mothers of different classes was acknowledged and public services requested to provide them for their womencolleagues.

As result, the chapter on women and development in the Sixth Plan resulted in the introduction of schemes specifically oriented to their needs and the incorporation of special components in various

The Department of Rural Development midway through the 6th Plan introduced a 30 percent quota for women in all anti-poverty programs for the rural areas. In addition to the women—specific experimental program of Development of Women and Children

The government had also converted the Division for Women's Welfare and Development, till then a part of the Ministry of Social Welfare; into a full Department of Women and Child Development and transferred it to the Ministry of Human Resource Development in 1985.

The new features of the section on Women's Development are a paragraph on violence against women and a two-page "Situational Analysis" – which highlights the problems of higher mortality, lower education and increasing unemployment of women, "the conceptual methodological and perception" biases regarding value of women's work, compounded by women's concentration in the informal sector, resulting in casualization, non-protection of labour laws and inaccessibility to credit, technology and other types of development assistance.

The strategy in the eighth plan was to ensure that the benefits of development from different sectors do not sidestep women and special programs are implemented to complement the general programs. The strategy of formation and strengthening of grassroots organizations to articulate local women's needs and their role in decentralized planning and implementation was reiterated, convergence and integration of services offered by health, education, employment and welfare programs at the grass roots level was emphasized. Most importantly, there was a paragraph on the girl child with the promise of 'special programs'. Education and nutrition, legal literacy and "changes in social attitudes and perceptions in regard to the role of women" were mentioned as essential for empowerment. However, women were mentioned only in the context of women specific programs. There was no mention of a women's quota or an earmarked share of allocations. The most dramatic development during this period was the passing of the 73rd and 74th (Constitutional) Amendment Acts in 1992 which conferred constitutional status on the institutions of local governance, mandated regular elections and wider powers/resources and reserved one-third of seats for women, including among the already reserved categories of SCs/STs and office bearers at different levels of these bodies.

It was pledged that an integrated approach will be adopted towards empowering women through convergence of existingservices, resources, infrastructure and manpower available in both women-specificandwomenrelated sectors. To this effect, ninth plan directed both Centre and states to adopt a special strategy of 'Women Component Plan' through which not less than 30 per cent of funds/benefits are earmarked by all for women- related sectors. It further directed for women's component plan as a part of the plan of each sector to identify the flow of benefits to and impact of plans and programs onwomen.

Organizing women into Self Help Groups marks the beginning of a major process of empowering women, the institutions thus developed, it was foreseen would provide a permanent forum for articulating their needs and contributing their perspectives to development. Recognizing the fact that women have been socialized only to take a back seat in public life, affirmative action through deliberate strategies needed to be initiated to provide equal access to and control over factors contributing to such empowerment, particularly in the areas of health, education, information, lifelong learning for self-development, vocational skills, employment and income generating activities, land and other forms of property including through inheritance, common property, resources, credit, technology and markets etc.

The Eleventh Planwith objective of inclusive growth strategy for the first time in the history of Indian plann attemptedtomovebeyondempowermentandrecognizewomenasagentsofsustainedsocioing economicgrowth and change. The Plan acknowledged women's agencies and tried to ensure that their needs, rights and contribution are reflected in every section of the plan document. Gender is, therefore, a cross cutting theme; it is not confined to a single chapter on Women and Children. It envisioned to develop an integrated approach which would eventually dispense the need for a chapter. While endeavoring separate to guarantee the rights and entitlements of all women, the eleventh plan recognized that women are not a homogenous category. T heir situations, and consequently requirements, differ based on their locations within various castes, communities, religions, geographic and development zones and the effort during the Plan period was to cater to all these differential and specific requirements.

The vision of the Twelfth Plan is faster, sustainable and more inclusive growth. Inclusive growth is viewed as a growth process which is seen to be 'fair' by different socio-economic groups that constitute our society. It intensivelyworkedtowardsendingofgender-basedinequities, discrimination and all forms of violence against girls and women. This is fundamental to enabling women participate fully in the development process, and in fulfilling their social, economic, civil and political rights. This is to take us closer to SDGs, if not completely achieve them.

National Institute for Transforming India (NITI) replacing the Planning Commission, India has moved away from the planned economy. The vision document for 2017-22 titled 'Strategy for New India @75', is an outcome of 2018 economic survey. sans institutional and structural barriers; and

ii) To enhance the female labour force participation rate to at least 30 per cent by 2022-23.

The Ministry of Women and Child Development, also implements a few innovative schemes besides formulatingpolicies and programs; enacts/amends legislations affecting women and coordinates the efforts of both governmental and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to raise the overall status of women on par with that of men. The programs of the Department include i) empowering strategies; ii) employment and income generation; iii) welfare and support services; iv) awareness generation and gender sensitization and v) otherenablingmeasures. These programs play the role of being both supplementary and complementary t othe other general development programs in the sectors of health, education, labour and employment, rural and urban development, etc.

Themeans to empower the women, under the various schemes of the Ministry has been primarily through S elf- Help Groups (SHGs). The SHGs be it Indira Mahila Yoajna launched in 1995 or its recast Syamsidha (2001) or the redesigned avatar of National Mission for Empowerment of Women (NMEW) into Mahila Shakti Kendra, are pivotal to empowering strategies. The huge numbers of SHGs in India are indicative of the prominence the collective is accorded in the government's scheme of empowerment, especially the economic empowerment of women inIndia.

B. Women Development Program (WDP)

In 1984, the government of Rajasthan initiated a unique program "Women Development Program" (WDP). The program, a consortium of the government, voluntary groups and research institutions aimed at strengthening women's organizations and their involvement in development processes at the grass roots.

The WDP, set up by the government of Rajasthan is a response to non –deliverance of hitherto development programs and the attempts to channel resources to women, to change their status for better. "It also took note of the fact that men had been entrusted with the responsibility for women's development in the family, government and society far too long" (Dighe and Jain, 1989). Women empowerment 'or' development was defined as bringing about a change in women's self – image through a collective process at the grass roots level; as providing them a space of their own and greater control over the conditions that determine their life.

The WDP was based on the premise that if women's empowerment had to be achieved speedily and on a lar

C. The Mahila Samakhya Program(MS)

The outcome of the WDP encouraged, the Government of India's MoHRD's department of education to roll out another innovative program, "Mahila Samakhya". The program initiated in 1989, had a defined plan i.e. "Empowerment of Women", although inspired by WDP, this program was different from it in both content and structure.

The MS program initially rolled out in 10 districts of the three states namely Uttar Pradesh, Karnataka and Gujarat and later scaled to 126 districts in seven states namely, Andhra Pradesh, Assam, Bihar, Chattisgarh, Jharkhand, Kerala and Uttarakhand. The MS program is registered as an independent society in every State. The MS is neither a State nor a voluntary body. It was designed to be a decentralized experiment, and body that would evolve as it grows, in that terms

Sanghas. The sanghas, were a means to collective power to enable women to plan, implement and direct their own empowerment, especially education. The sanghas were supported by facilitators called Sayoginis. The Sayogini motivated women to come together at the place and time suitable to them and helped them to identify issues and come up with an action plan to change their destination. It was perceived that this shared learning would plug in the gaps in the programs and help them to reach the unreached.

The MS program was envisaged would create demand through various Information, Education and Communication (IEC) activities and thus put pressure on the supply side i.e. the service provider be it education, health, gender specific programs. The MS program was implemented in a campaign mode to have a wider reach and impact. The program campaign was led by numerous women's groups with different ideological leanings around issues that affect their lives. The wide range of issues included a) equal employmentopportunities;b)equalwagesforsameandequalwork;c)righttoresources;d)preventionag ainst and right to raise voice against domestic violence; e) Women's right to reproductive choices; f) right to safe environment; and g) rights to participate in decision making and role in electoral politics.

The campaigns led by several autonomous women's groups and as part of larger mass-based movements challenged the inadequacy and injustice of development processes for not addressing women's realities and needs while also challenging the development paradigm of the State.

D. The Self-Employed Women's Association(SEWA)

The acronym SEWA literarily means Service. The group since its formation in 1972, is serving women as an organization and as amovement. SEWA emerged in response to the expressed needs of women workers in the unorganizedsectorwhohadlargelybeenuncounted,undercountedandhiddenorinvisiblebymaledomin ated trade union movements. SEWA adopted the term" Self-Employed Workers" to counter the labels of 'unorganized' 'informal' 'unprotected' or 'marginal' that were applied to a large section of the workforce, constituted by women. SEWA organized women workers to achieve their goals of full employment and self- reliance through the strategy of struggle and development. The struggle is against the many constraints and limitations imposed on them by society and the economy, while development activities strengthen women's bargaining power and offer them new alternatives. Over the years, SEWA the organization has become a movement. A movement synonymous with the empowerment of women, a movement enhanced by its being a sangam or confluence of three movements: the labor movement, the cooperative movement and the women's movement. But it is also a movement of self-employed workers:

Through their own movement women become strong and visible. Their tremendous economic and social contributions are recognized with globalization, liberalization and other economic changes.

The GoI accepted the recommendation of the Radhakrishna Committee and restructured the

SGSY into National Rural Livelihoods Mission (NRLM) in FY 2010–2011 to provide a sharper and greater focus as well as momentum for poverty elimination. The years 2011–2012 and 2012–

2013 were the transition years as both SGSY and NRLM were implemented; complete transition of SGSY to NRLM took place with effect from 1stApril, 2013. The SGSY also aimed to achieve the Millennium Development Goals (MDG) by 2015. The framework for implementation for

DAY-NRLM was approved by the Ministry on 9thDecember, 2010. The Mission was formally launched on 3rdJune, 2011. In November 2015, the program was renamed Deendayal Antyodaya

NRLM implementation is in a Mission Mode. This enables (a) shift from the present allocation based strategy to a demand driven strategy enabling the states to formulate their own complementary role to the other general developmentalprograms in the sectors of health, education, rural development etc. All these efforts are directed to ensure that a women are empowered (legal, political, economic and social) and thus become equal partners in national development along withmen.

The working group on women's agency and empowerment<sup>4</sup> advocated a shift from mere 'income' poverty of women to the adoption of a 'multi-dimensional' approach to poverty and wellbeing. The Multidimensional Poverty Index (MPI) complements the income poverty measures by reflecting all the other deprivations with respect to education, health and living standard that a poor person simultaneously faces. It assesses povertyattheindividuallevel, with poor persons being those who face multiple deprivations, and the extent of their poverty being measured by the range of their deprivations.

The Twelfth Plan worked towards making a transition from viewing women as 'victims' of poverty to empowering them to change the contexts in which they live. And redefined poverty as not only lack of material resources but also lack of power and choice. This shift in definition of poverty and empowerment contrasts the hither to narrow view which identified development with growth in Gross Domestic Product (GDP), rise in personal incomes, industrialization and technological advancement.

Appreciating that women empowerment is multidimensional,theMSKschemethereforeseekstoprovidesthe services that will build upon by leveraging available resources of variety of schemes/programs of the government at the District/blocklevel.

The primary function of the scheme is to create a wareness or demand generation for the various women cen tric programs under the various ministries, it is based on the belief, and demand generation would lead to seeking of services through appropriate training and capacitybuilding.

The districts cover under MSK program are the aspirational districts as identified by NITI Aayog with most backward blocks in the country. In all by the financial year 2019-2020 115 districts and 920 blocks of the country would have been implemented MSK.
