ABSTRACT

This paper investigates the functional classification of towns in Maharashtra state in 2011.Urban settlements can be considered for their certain function from ancient periods. Cities may be classified on the basis of economic activities carried on in the city. Certain economic activities may have acquired greater significance than others. Some cities are known for their administrative status as State, District capitals, others for their educational institutions and yet others for trade and transport. Towns are therefore classified according to their dominant function. These functions are caused by natural or manmade factors like site, physiography, environment, forest, resources human activity, economic development, populations etc. The towns are classified according there functions as administrative, education, defense, transportation, cultural, commercial, historical, tourist, mining, manufacturing towns etc. The functional associations of the towns are classified in to eight groups. There are three towns with eight functions, which are major cities in the state. They were Kolhapur, Nagpur and Nashik. These all eight, seven and six functions towns are dominant in the economic, political, educational, social and historical functions. Sixteen towns are dominates in five functions, forty eight in four functions, seventy seven in three functions, eighty five in bi functions and eighty towns are dominant in single function.

Key word: Functional Classification, Economic development, Populations.

INTRODUCTION:

The towns are classified based on their function they perform which varies across the disciplines like in geography it is synonymous with occupation. Functional classification of towns attempt to categories towns and cities according to their economic functions, identifying their roles within urban systems.Urban settlements can be considered for their certain function from ancient periods. Cities may be classified on the basis of economic activities carried on in the city. Certain economic activities may have acquired greater significance than others. Some cities are known for their administrative status as State, District capitals, others for their educational institutions and yet others for trade and transport. Towns are therefore classified according to their dominant function. These functions are caused by natural or manmade factors like site, physiography, environment, forest, resources human activity, economic development, populations etc. The towns are classified according there functions as administrative, education, defense, transportation, cultural, commercial, historical, tourist, mining, manufacturing towns etc. Maharashtra is forwarded state in socio-economic activities. Because of this large number of towns in the state is developed as specialized single or multifunctional functions.
